The number of days the public can go to Chicago's museums for free could be reduced by half under a state bill that has resurfaced. State law mandates museums and aquariums across the state must be open to Illinois residents for free for 52 days a year. The house bill sponsored by Reps. Joe Sosnowski (R-Rockford) and John Anthony (R-Morris) would cut that in half to 26 days.

"It's basically crazy we would require them to have a sixth of their year to be free and we don't provide them with any [state] funding as a result," Sosnowski said.

Allowing free admission for 52 days a year is a "big cost" to the museums, he said. That's why some Chicago museums favor the legislation, Sonowski said.

"Presumably, there would be more revenue that would come in and that could be used for a variety of things but particularly for exhibits and more programming and things to offer to our guests," said Rebecca Schejbal, administrative director of Museums in the Park, the coalition of 11 Chicago museums on park property.

The 11 museums on Chicago Park District property are Adler Planetarium, Art Institute, Chicago History Museum, DuSable Museum of African American History, Field Museum, Museum of Science and Industry, Museum of Contemporary Art, Shedd Aquarium, Peggy Notebaert Nature Museum, National Museum of Mexican Art and National Museum of Puerto Rican Arts and Culture.

A few museums directed inquires on the bill to the nonprofit Museums in the Park. Meanwhile, DuSable Museum said it supported the bill and Adler Planetarium said it trusts the state legislators to make the policy regarding free days.

Museums in the Park isn't opposed to the bill, she said. "It's something we're aware of and we're watching and we're keeping an eye on it," she said.

The bill has moved out of a house committee, and Sosnowski said he hopes to have it called for a house vote in the next couple of weeks. He expects it to have bipartisan support like the bill did when former Gov. Pat Quinn vetoed it in 2013, saying it would hurt people who couldn't afford to pay the price of admission. There were not enough votes to override Quinn's veto at that time.

Now, Illinois' new leader Gov. Rauner will "carefully review any legislation that crosses his desk," his office said.

Chicago's museums last year saw more than 7.4 million visitors walk through their doors, with Shedd Aquarium having the most visitors. A total of 854,546 people attended the free days. The Art Institute had the highest attendance on free days.

The amount in revenue admission fees generate varies among the museums, Schejbal said. In general, less than 15 percent of the museums' operating budgets comes from admissions, she said.

The Chicago Park District provides operating subsidies to those museums every year from property tax revenue. For at least the past five years, the park district budgeted $30 million annually to help the Museums in the Park.

At the same time, many museums have raised admission fees in recent years including Art Institute and Museum of Science and Industry.

The city hasn't taken a position on the bill, mayoral spokeswoman Shannon Breymaier said. But the city "prides itself on offering growing access to the arts and culture, so it would be unfortunate if the number of free cultural opportunities was reduced," she said.

Two Chicago museums—National Museum of Mexican Art in Pilsen and National Museum of Puerto Rican Arts and Culture in Humboldt Park—are free to the public all year.

National Museum of Mexican Art has offered free admission since the museum opened in 1987, founder and president Carlos Tortolero said.

"This kind of accessibility is very important to us. If the arts are essential to the human spirit, then everyone should have equal access to the arts. Reducing the number of free days is promoting the exclusivity of the museum world," Tortolero said.

"Whether we're talking about a family of four from Pilsen, teenagers from Berwyn on a date or a couple visiting Chicago, we'd like everyone to be able to enjoy the museum's exhibitions and to appreciate Mexican art and culture," he said.

The true confessions of a female referee

Christa Madison
» redeye@redeyechicago.com
» @redeyechicago

The National Football League hired its first female referee last week. If I were a betting woman, I would say that close to 99 percent of people who heard this let it pass by them without a second thought. Well, I for one, having been a soccer referee for more than 15 years, would like to congratulate Sarah Thomas on this amazing accomplishment and also take this opportunity to provide insight into our female-referee world.

Before you immediately discard this as a feminist, "all men are evil and all female referees should dance around a fire of burning sports bras" piece, let me put your mind at ease. I just want to reflect humorously on situations that have occurred in my career that usually prompt me to question what century we live in or make me wonder whether it's time to get my hearing checked.

> For every sexist situation I have been placed in, I have had an equal number of positive experiences.

ESPN featured Thomas on an episode of "Outside the Lines" in 2011. She was moving up in the ranks as a football referee, but was not yet close to becoming a part of the NFL. This episode might have fallen off most people's radars, but I was captivated. She described how Gerry Austin, a former NFL official and Conference USA's officiating coordinator, instructed Thomas to tuck her hair under her referee cap and refrain from wearing too much makeup—those were conversations with which I was all too familiar. Along the same lines, Thomas' husband during that episode said he texted his wife about her backside being up in the air during a pileup on the field on national TV. Is that something a wife would normally worry about with her husband? I think not.

Of the 1,210 people officiating high school soccer games in Illinois, 52 are female, a spokesman at the Illinois High School Association said. That's 4.3 percent. And 20 percent of Illinois' 4,981 licensed soccer referees are females, said Barbara Baumgartner, office manager at the Illinois Soccer Referee Committee. But there are only six female referees who are licensed beyond entry level and can officiate high-level matches between competitive youth clubs, adult amateurs, and college- and high school-aged players, Baumgartner added. My usual joke is that we all have become friends by default. If you show up to a highly competitive soccer match and you have a full female crew, odds are good you will now know at least one of them.

We congregate and laugh about the issues we have to deal with as women on the field, like how all uniforms available for us are only cut for men's bodies. Even if you are the most fit person on the field but your outward appearance suggests otherwise, you will not get better opportunities. We are expected to fit a specific body image despite our differences in body shape, which forces us to get our uniforms tailored and trim our physique for appearance purposes only. When the coaches have to hand rosters to the main referee, it always gets offered first to the men on my team even though I am the main referee that day. I have been told by the occasional male player or coach after a very well officiated game that I did an OK job "for a girl."

You might be wondering by now if all this makes me mad. Sometimes it does, but for every sexist situation I have been placed in, I have had an equal number of positive experiences. Parents of female players express their delight that a female officiated their daughter's match. I had a college men's team call and request that "chick" referee who did a great job come back to ref for them again. I usually win that one by process of elimination.

So, again, congratulations to Thomas. As a Bears fan, I usually only am interested in my team's schedule. This season, however, I am looking forward to tuning in to see her represent the professionalism and grace female officials bring to their sports. And if I had any piece of advice for her, it would be to let your hair down, wear as much makeup as you like and stick that ass in the air for all to see. You've earned it.

Maggie Daley Park climbing wall expected to open next month

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

Rock climbers—or wannabes—could be able to scale up the outdoor wall at Maggie Daley Park as early as next month.

With 19,000 square feet of climbing surface for beginner and expert climbers, the Malkin-Sacks Rock Climbing Wall is expected to open in mid May, said Chicago Park District spokeswoman Jessica Maxey-Faulkner.

The park district is already looking to hire full-time and part-time climbing wall personnel starting at $13 an hour.

Maxey-Faulkner did not know what the cost to the public would be to climb up the wall.

The park's ice skating ribbon, renovated fieldhouse and parts of the children's playground opened in December. The city has said other amenities such as portions of the play garden and the lawn areas will be open to the public in the spring.

HILLARY CLINTON ANNOUNCES 2016 BID FOR PRESIDENCY

EPA

Hillary Rodham Clinton jumped back into presidential politics Sunday, announcing her much-awaited second campaign for the White House. "Everyday Americans need a champion. I want to be that champion," she said.

As she did in 2007, Clinton began her campaign for the 2016 Democratic nomination with a video. But rather than follow it with a splashy rally, she instead plans to head to the early-voting states of Iowa and New Hampshire, looking to connect with voters directly.

IN IOWA
Clinton will tour a community college in Monticello on Tuesday and visit a produce distribution company in Norwalk on Wednesday, according to a schedule provided by her campaign Sunday.

"So I'm hitting the road to earn your vote. Because it's your time. And I hope you'll join me on this journey," Clinton said at the end of a video.

This voter-centric approach was picked with a purpose, to show that Clinton is not taking the nomination for granted. Only after about a month of such events will Clinton will give a broader speech outlining more specifics about her rationale for running.

The former secretary of state, senator and first lady enters the race in a strong position to succeed her rival from the 2008 campaign, President Obama.

GOP ready with attack ads

Former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, in an online video posted through his political action committee several hours before Clinton's Sunday announcement, focused on her ties to President Obama.

"We must to do better than the Obama-Clinton foreign policy that has damaged relationships with our allies and emboldened our enemies," said Bush, who is expected to formally announce his candidacy this summer.

Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky, who announced his candidacy for president last week, released his first television ad Sunday, calling Clinton the "worst of the Washington machine."

The Republican National Committee has also released an ad in recent days that seeks to cast doubt on Clinton's candidacy. The ad uses various sound bites from news reports to target Clinton on issues such as her use of a private email server to conduct business as secretary of State and her effort to "reset" U.S.-Russia relations.

THINGS TO KNOW ABOUT THE NEW MASTERS CHAMP

RedEye
If you expected Tiger Woods to dominate/fall flat on his face at the Masters this weekend, well, you'll have to wait until at least his next tournament. While the most recognizable golfer on Earth played well in his "comeback" (5 under par), Woods wasn't the big story.

That distinction goes to Jordan Spieth, who captured his first green jacket Sunday. (Yes, it's still far from in style.)

The 21-year-old—he's just a few months older than Woods was when he won his first Masters, in 1997—broke the 36- and 54-hole scoring records even before teeing off in the final round. Spieth ended up tying Woods' tournament record at 18 under en route to his four-shot victory.

"It was very nerve-wracking [Sunday]," Spieth told CBS after his win. "I didn't sleep well last night, just got out here and got in a little rhythm ... and couldn't let up. It was the most incredible week of my life."

You'll be seeing a lot more of this Dallas native, no doubt. In the meantime, here are eight things to know about the budding superstar.

GETTY IMAGES PHOTOS

1 You're history, Phil
Twenty-five birdies in one Masters? Sorry, Phil Mickelson, that's old news. Spieth snapped that record on the 10th hole Sunday and finished with 28.

2 Illinois agrees with him
In July 2013, at age 19, Spieth became the fourth-youngest winner in PGA history, conquering the field at the John Deere Classic in Silvis, Ill.

3 Karma's not his thing
Being from Dallas, naturally Spieth is a huge Cowboys fan. So you can imagine what he thought of that infamous non-catch by Dez Bryant in the playoff loss at Green Bay in January.

"Tired of this whole karma crap people are saying.. That was a TERRIBLE call," Spieth tweeted.

4 He bleeds burnt orange
Spieth led Texas to the NCAA title in 2012, his only season with the Longhorns. He's still a huge fan of Texas in general.

"I don't think people can watch University of Texas basketball or football games with me—really anything Texas is playing—without wanting to punch me in the face," he told Golf Digest in 2012.

5 Country's his jam
According to his website, Spieth is a big country music fan and has played with Jake Owen at a Pebble Beach Pro-Am.

6 Family comes first
"She's the best thing that ever happened to our family," Spieth has said of his younger sister, Ellie, who has autism. Children with special needs are just one of the causes the Jordan Spieth Charitable Fund benefits.

7 He's off the market

8 His house is nicer than yours

| 1 What's the sports equivalent of the Apple Watch? | Jay Cutler. Not worth the cost. | The NFL's personal seat licenses. I can't believe they invented them. I can't believe people will buy them. | The Cubs and Sox's rosters. Useless and expensive. | Starlin Castro. High expectations and doesn't deliver. Big hat, no cattle. | NASCAR. Utterly worthless yet beloved by an odd group of people. |
| 2 One week into baseball season, is it time to start panicking? | Only if you're in line for the restrooms at Wrigley after five beers. | Has Kris Bryant suffered a season-ending injury for the Cubs? No? Check back later. | We never get to panic late in the season, might as well do it now. | About the Wrigley renovations? YES! | Like Geoffrey Arend in the beginning of "Super Troopers," I'm freakin' out, man! |
| 3 The Cubs and Sox's clutch hitting is missing. Where should we look? | Under the tarp covering the Wrigley Field bleachers. | I can't believe you put "Cubs," "Sox" and "clutch hitting" together in one sentence. | Check out the Tigers clubhouse—they seem to have a suspicious amount. | 1984 and 1992, respectively. | Nothing makes me happier than seeing Chicagoans write off their teams one week into the season. |
| 4 Why is Tiger Woods so proud of his Masters effort? | Well, he kind of failed at his mistresses effort ... | He kept it on the green. Mostly. And he kept it in his pants. Mostly. | He didn't giggle once when people yelled, "Get in the hole!" Me on the other hand ... | He hasn't won a major in seven years. Any effort is a good effort for Tiger. | Every day he plays golf, he knows that's four hours that he can't be cheating on his significant other. |
| 5 What's more worrisome, Derrick Rose's knee or the Hawks' power play? | The Hawks' power play. Derrick Rose's knee passed worrisome two returns ago. | That goes to Derrick Rose's knee since we know it actually exists. | Neither—the correct answer is the Bulls defense. | Hawks! Patron Saint of Power Plays, PLEASE bless the Blackhawks to score and score A LOT. Amen. | Daenerys Targaryen's decision-making skills. |

Hawks can't wait for Kane

Chicago Tribune

The collective breath holding began the moment Patrick Kane skated off the ice cradling his left arm and continued when a shrine to the Blackhawks winger appeared on a wall in Wrigleyville.

A large portion of the city has been playing the waiting game since Kane suffered a broken left collarbone Feb. 24 and was given an approximate 12-week timetable to return. That put his availability for the playoffs right around when the Western Conference finals—if the Hawks made it that far—would begin.

With the 26-year-old already taking contact in practice, it appears he will return sooner rather than later; he might take the ice for the first round of the playoffs Wednesday.

"I don't think our team is that mentally weak where we focus on one player and think, 'Oh, we're really going to be good when we get Kaner back,' " defenseman Duncan Keith said. "That's a very mentally weak way to look at things, just hoping and praying you get a guy back to come and save you. We've been around long enough that we know one guy doesn't make a team. Certainly, Kaner is a big part of our group and he helps our team game out scoring goals and things like that, but if we're going to win it's going to have to be everybody."

There is a danger there to sit back and wait for Kane to return and complete a Hawks lineup that already boasts the likes of Keith, captain Jonathan Toews, Marian Hossa and Patrick Sharp, among others, and be the dominant player he was before was injured.

"We can't be thinking like that at all," Toews said. "Even if we do play long enough for him to come back into the lineup, we can't expect him to just take over and be the player that he was right away."

At the time of his injury, Kane was leading the league in scoring. Instead of lamenting what they didn't have, the Hawks showed they have more than enough to compete. The Hawks were in third place in the Central Division when Kane went down and they finished there, setting up a showdown against Nashville.

Still, some of the Hawks have pondered how things will be when Kane returns.

"The sooner the better, but we want him to be fully recovered to play his best hockey," winger Bryan Bickell said. "We've been picking it up in the room to play the right way without him ... but when he comes back, it just brings us that much more."

Public art exhibit gives lifelike shape to victims of Chicago gun violence

Chicago Tribune

"Just as I was coming around the wall, I got a butterfly," Foster said. "... Almost like I was coming around the corner to meet Porshe. But she's not here."

It has been more than two years since her 15-year-old daughter was shot and killed as she visited friends on the Southwest Side. As part of a public art exhibit highlighting gun violence, Porshe's shape—height, weight and teenage casual stance—had been carefully studied and sculpted with plaster over wire mesh before she was dressed in her distinct style. Missing was an image of her face, done intentionally to highlight her family's loss.

Foster was heading into the plaza to view the lifelike statue for the first time.

There her daughter was, in a swingy skirt, knit gray hat and scarf, fitted jacket and black leggings, one foot flipped back.

"It's a good look. It looks like something she would wear," Foster said quietly as she looked at the mannequinlike sculpture.

The exhibit is part of "Unforgotten," a public awareness campaign by the Illinois Council Against Handgun Violence that will be traveling around the state, but Friday's event provided the first chance for families of the eight victims to view the statues.

Curious passers-by also wandered into the plaza, leaning in close to gaze at the vacant faces of the statues. A woman walking by couldn't manage any words and teared up. A young child sat on a bench next to the statue of Terrell Bosley, a bass guitar case slung over his back. Bosley, who played in a church band, was fatally shot in 2006 as he helped a bandmate unload drums from a car.

From a distance, the statues appeared real: a student heading to or from class, his backpack slung over his back; a girl staying warm, her fur hood pulled up.

But as viewers got closer, the figures turned haunting as it became clear that none had faces, a jarring reminder that no matter how real they looked, these people were forever gone.

WEEKEND VIOLENCE

One man was killed, and at least 11 others were wounded in separate shootings across the city's South, West and Southwest sides between Saturday evening and Sunday morning. A 22-year-old man died after he was shot in Park Manor, police said. Three men were injured in separate shootings Sunday afternoon and evening on the South and North sides, police said. TRIBUNE

This ghostly feature of the project was slightly off-putting to Foster at first, but she has since come to understand the potential power of the image.

"I think it's a really good way of presenting my daughter, who walked this earth and had purpose," Foster said in an interview before she viewed the exhibit. "... It does [convey] the message that my daughter was once here and she is no longer here."

The victims featured in "Unforgotten" include some who remain well-known, like Hadiya Pendleton, a high schooler who was slain in 2013 just days after performing at events related to President Obama's inauguration. Blair Holt, son of a Chicago firefighter and a Chicago police officer, was killed on a CTA bus in 2007 as he shielded a friend after shots rang out. But there were also lesser-known victims like Porshe, who was visiting a friend in 2012 when someone sprayed the yard with bullets.

Each statue was molded in a way to capture how they stood or maybe slouched, or what they carried with them. Artists studied photographs and watched videos. They learned the exact heights and weights of each victim. They talked extensively with family members. And when possible, they dressed them in the victim's own clothing.

"We tried to find their essence with the poses, how they would stand ... to almost bring them back to life to tell their own story," said lead artist Jordan Sparrow, who works at the advertising agency FCB Chicago.

The campaign was launched at a time when warmer weather brings a cyclical uptick in gun violence. And while Chicago's violence has been on a steady decline since the early to mid-1990s, more than 400 people still were killed last year alone. Gun violence remains a persistent problem in many of the same city neighborhoods, leaving residents there battered by the problem.

"Unforgotten" also was designed to raise awareness about violence across the state, where about 1,000 people die by gunfire each year, organizers said. Among the eight victims featured in the exhibit was Ryanne Mace, a 19-year-old from Carpentersville who died along with four others in the 2008 classroom shooting at Northern Illinois University.

As the morning progressed Friday, it became clear that the instant it takes to lose someone to a shooting results in entrenched sorrow. Holt's mother, Annette Nance-Holt, wept quietly as she stood with a few others beside his statue.

When Pamela Bosley, Terrell's mother, sat on a bench next to her son's statue posing for a picture, her face appeared strained. She later said it had been painful to part with his clothing.

But the statues brought back other memories as well. Chicago police Cmdr. Ron Holt, Blair's father, said that as he was heading east on Huron toward the plaza, he gazed up and zeroed in immediately on his son's statue. He was taken right back.

"I'm looking at all the images and I said, 'OK, that's Blair,' " he said with a smile as he looked over his son's statue. "... It is a reminder of who Blair was as a teenager and as a young man and how he carried himself. He was a young man of promise and hope."

> I'M LOOKING AT ALL THE IMAGES AND I SAID, 'OK, THAT'S BLAIR.' ... IT IS A REMINDER OF WHO BLAIR WAS AS A TEENAGER AND AS A YOUNG MAN AND HOW HE CARRIED HIMSELF. HE WAS A YOUNG MAN OF PROMISE AND HOPE."

SPIKE LEE FILM SPARKS DEBATE OVER TERM 'CHIRAQ'

Chicago Tribune

Reports that filmmaker Spike Lee is planning to shoot a feature movie here called "Chiraq" ruined Aaron Pierce's mood last week.

"I'm just really concerned about using that name," said Pierce, a South Side rapper who started an "Anti-Chiraq" social media campaign and also runs a mentoring program for public school students. "That name does not really give us a positive look. That name belittles our city and I feel like it dehumanizes us.

As word spread Thursday that Lee is courting Samuel L. Jackson, Jeremy Piven, Common and Kanye West for the cast of "Chiraq," it gave rise to more talk about the city's gritty moniker and reputation for violence.

Some residents worried that a film carrying the nickname could glorify Chicago's violence. Others wondered whether spotlighting the label could affect tourism, business development and even the confidence of young people who are growing up here.

Chicago has been tagged with negative nicknames before, from "Beirut on the Lake" in the 1980s to "Chiberia" during the winter of 2013-14. But Chiraq particularly stings, reflecting the mindset of people who feel they live in a war zone because of rampant violence.

The term has been around for years but became especially popular in 2012 when Chicago experienced a spike in homicides, recording 504, far more than either New York or Los Angeles.

Chiraq has been referenced in rap songs and mentioned in films and on television shows. It also has been printed on apparel, and there is a Twitter handle that uses the name and tweets information on local homicides. In one rap reference, Lil Reese, a protege of Chief Keef, used the word in his song "Traffic."

"Where I'm from, this Chiraq, you get left as tragic," he rapped.

As first reported by The Wrap, Lee's project is called "Chiraq" and he is making it for Amazon Studios. Lee, who comes to town later this month as part of the Chicago International Movies & Music Festival, plans to shoot the feature film here as well.

SOUL OF A DANCER

Freida Pinto steps up in 'Desert Dancer'

By Matt Pais | REDEYE

After months of dance training—first four hours a day, five days a week, then six hours a day, then eight hours a day, six days a week—for her role in "Desert Dancer," Freida Pinto received some unexpected feedback from choreographer Akram Khan.

" 'You are what we call a bad dancer. And that's a compliment,' " the actress recalls by phone from New York. "And I go, 'What? How is that a compliment? He called me a bad dancer,' I'm thinking to myself. Obviously I'm too timid at this point to express my shock at what he just said. He goes, 'Yeah, no, it's a compliment. Before you were not a dancer, and now you're a bad dancer. And now we've got to put in the extra effort to get you to the stage of being a dancer, and then a good dancer.'"

The dancing scenes are the highlight of the film, based on a true story and now showing, in which Pinto plays Elaheh, a member of an underground dance troupe in Iran striving to express herself and put on a secret performance despite dancing being forbidden in the country. You surely know the 30-year-old Indian actress from "Slumdog Millionaire" and absolutely should Google all of the work she's done supporting women and children around the world, with praise from no less than first lady Michelle Obama.

I've never thought about "bad dancer" being the second level of ability—that some people are so bad or inexperienced they're not even good enough to be called bad.

[Laughs.] Especially because he was not treating us like actors. He was treating us like dancers. He had told us from the very beginning, "I'm not going to treat you like actors because actors are spoiled. We're not going to go through mollycoddling of any sort: 'Oh, poor thing, [you have] injuries now, let's take a break.' You're going to have to power through all of that."

You've said you always felt like you had a dancer's soul. What did you mean by that?

I meant I always felt like I was meant to express myself not just through acting and to be in front of the camera as an actor but also with my body. I felt like I had this ability to tell stories with just body movements or even the smallest movements. I feel it's so powerful when you watch dancers perform; they can move you to tears or make you feel extremely ecstatic or make you laugh. I felt like that [kind of] part would require me to learn some techniques for sure but also open myself up to a world where I don't feel afraid of looking like a fool. Now I'm actually not afraid of doing anything silly and stupid anymore. ... I still am, a few things, but not this.

What's a song you just have to dance to, and one that others like but you can't stand?

I love "Taro." Have you heard "Taro" by Alt-J?

I haven't.

You've gotta hear it. It's one of the most beautiful songs I've heard. It's actually like a love story song, which is really beautiful. I love Alt-J, and I love everything that they do. "Taro" is one of my favorites. And one song that I can't dance to? There's nothing I can't dance to. Even if there's something I don't like and I feel like, "I don't like this music," I'll still dance to it. Heavy metal: I don't know what to do when I hear it.

My eyes are wide open, saying, "Uhh ..." I don't know. [Laughs.] I really don't know. I'm a little confused.

How did your nerves for your dances compare to making the withdrawal of Elaheh's heroin addiction look believable?

I don't think about those things. That's one of the things I feel with dancing that I've definitely learned. Even with the withdrawal scenes, one of the things we actually did was in preparation, we did the withdrawal scenes as a dance to understand. Actually if you look at it, it looks like some kind of a dance in a way, the way it's shot as a montage. It's always ... a little bit of a challenge to bring yourself to that place, but once I'm in that place where I feel [prepared] I can take it as loud or as internal as I want to take it. Once you're there you just let go. You don't think that much. If you think too much, you destroy it.

You're doing so much incredible work as an activist for women's rights. There's so much misogyny in Hollywood movies, comedies in particular. How do you feel women are portrayed in these? Is there anything you've seen get better, and what's something you'd like to see change?

When we're on this mission to make things better, we're always going to bring up things that are not good and find out why this needs to change. I try to do what I do a little differently because I also try to talk about the things that have already changed or that are changing brilliantly. Because you have to be inspired. You have to realize that it is going to lead to something good. And a lot has to be changed, absolutely. And not just comedies; the lack of imagining a full and complete woman ... ends up being in the script. But what about those other aspects that are very real and very normal to being a woman, and some of it can be dark and ugly, and people are afraid of throwing that into their projects. I feel that changes at the writer level, not just the actor level but at the writer level, the producer level and finally getting a good director on board as well. I'm always positive. I'm a very positive person, so I have no doubt that the way we look at women in cinema is going to change and has already changed.

I'm surprised some people are even willing to sign onto some Adam Sandler movies that use women so terribly.

Yeah, and I think there are some people who will not sign onto that, and hopefully those people are also watched. [Laughs.] I think there's always going to be the yin and yang. We'll find that middle ground. We'll find it.

HOROSCOPES

READ MORE AT TAROT.COM

Aries March 21-April 19
No matter how impatient you are today, it's crucial to filter out your most radical ideas. Take an innovative approach but keep in mind that the world is relying on you to show up in a responsible manner.

Taurus April 20-May 20
You might become so bored today that you go out of your way to stir up trouble. Keep in mind that you gain nothing by going to extremes to demonstrate your individuality. Being your authentic self is more convincing than anything else.

Gemini May 21-June 21
Saying outrageous things today can act like a lightning rod. Thankfully, you don't have to share every crazy idea that crosses your mind. Your mysterious smile keeps everyone guessing until you're ready to reveal your secrets.

Cancer June 22-July 22
You might want to avoid an emotional confrontation now by bringing the conversation back to the facts. Avoid the temptation to write the end of the story before you get there in real life.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22
Keeping conversations simple is the right strategy. You will be less likely to open a can of worms if you say fewer words. Silence really is golden when you prefer to be left alone to your own devices.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Today, it isn't as simple to stay on track. Don't try to shut down this exciting current. Listen to your inner voice, but keep returning to center yourself in between your mental excursions.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23
You could wind up disheartened if you mistakenly believe you can make a fantasy real now. Balancing each impulse with an equal dose of realism enables you to manifest more of your dreams than you ever imagined.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21
Your gift today is your ability to talk about an awkward subject in a palatable way. If something needs to be said now, say it. Be succinct and take full responsibility for your feelings. Your words are more healing as long as you speak from your heart.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You may feel emotionally constricted today. Proceed with caution. An internal voice could be telling you to break through those restraints that are impeding you. But tread carefully. Transformation doesn't happen overnight.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're not content to spend time in quiet contemplation. You want to set new goals and get started. But your current intentions carry much weight. Continue on your path; you may soon be surprised with your progress.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You might be caught in a tug-of-war now between looking to the future and your fear of change pulling you into the past. Taking a calculated risk is better than letting the moment pass. Look before you leap, as long as you go ahead and leap.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20
You may believe that you've already tried obvious ways to resolve a problem and now want an out-of-the-box approach. But don't just act. Talk things over with a friend; an additional perspective might be all you need to regain your clarity.

Tim Curry as Dr. Frank N. Furter

Paging Dr. Frank N. Furter

TV can't get enough musicals. EW.com reports Fox will be remaking 1970s cult classic "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" into a two-hour movie event, and this one won't be live. The reboot will be directed, produced and choreographed by Kenny Ortega ("High School Musical") but no word on casting just yet. What's Tim Curry even doing these days? He probably still can fit into those fishnets ...

Is that the one with the slime?

Bradley Cooper may have missed out on an Oscar, but on Sunday he got the next biggest honor: a golden bucket of popcorn presented by a bunch of famous teenagers you've never heard of. Other winners at this weekend's MTV Movie Awards were Shailene Woodley, who won Best Female Performance; the viewing public, who got to hear some comedic gold from host Amy Schumer; and Zac Efron, who took home the prize for Best Shirtless Performance for "Neighbors." When's the Academy planning on adding that category?

THE DIGIT

That's where Wale's "Seinfeld"-inspired "The Album About Nothing" currently sits on the Billboard charts, and the rapper says the show's star Jerry Seinfeld acted as his "conscious" for the album, the New York Times reports. In addition to being featured on the mixtape, Seinfeld also offered his new friend tips on handling fame and other advice. "Wale, to me, he has a little bit of hypnotic sound in his voice. There's a richness to his emotion. When you listen to the music, you can feel what he's feeling and I like that. Great singing always has that," Seinfeld said.

Please don't cry them a river

"Pusher Love Girl" indeed. (Sorry, that one was too easy.) Justin Timberlake and wife Jessica Biel have welcomed son Silas Randall Timberlake, reps confirmed Saturday, eonline.com reports. Timberlake announced the couple was expecting on Instagram back in January with a photo of him kissing Biel's stomach captioned "Thank you EVERYONE for the Bday wishes! This year, I'm getting the GREATEST GIFT EVER. CAN'T WAIT. #BoyOrGirl #YouNeverKnow #WeDontEvenKnow #WeAreTakingBets." Wonder who won ...

THE QUOTE

"For canoodle, I will say Roger Sterling. For marry, I'll say Harry Crane. And for kill, I won't say Pete Campbell, because I think he's a misunderstood young man. For kill, I'll unfortunately say Henry Francis."

—Jon Hamm playing a censored version of "[Bleep], Marry, Kill" with "Mad Men" characters in a Hollywood Reporter video. For the record, we'd canoodle Roger too.
